Quaint Fishes Found on Coast of Britain

When strolling among the rocks by the British sea coast, you may often see a quaint, bullet-headed fish, basking in the sunshine, well up above water level. It breathes quite naturally in the outer air and without apparent discomfort. This is the blenny, called by fisherfolk the "umbrella fish." To get a good view of it you need to be extremely cautious, as the fish will dive at the slightest suspicion of danger. Another little known British fish is the pipefish, the fastest swimmer in the sea; while the sunfish, looking like a huge bodyless head, is to be seen along the Cornish coast. The suck-fish, supposed by the ancients to be capable of holding up a ship by its power of suction, is also caught by British fishermen; another oddity being the nassfish, which angles for its meals with the aid of a fin that attracts small fry. But perhaps the most curious specimen is the red gurnard, which emits a sound strongly reminiscent of the first vocal efforts of a young cockerel.

Damascus Well Named Pearl of the Desert

The "Pearl of the Desert" (the Arabs call Damascus) and the name is well chosen. The thousand and one domes of mosques, the towers and spires, around which cluster like grapes, white painted houses surrounded by orchards and gardens, seem like so many necklaces of pearls, one within another, rippling out to the ancient walls that circle the city. The not-too-distant Mediterranean softens the dry, harsh air blown from the desert. At night the blue sky is divided in two; golden from the reflection of the yellow sands of the desert and deep blue where the sea mirrors itself. The Pharaonic founders of Damascus must have had a vision when they looked down from the heights of the Ghab Salabiya on the Anti-Lebanon into the valley in which the city is now set. Builders with vision, those Pharaohs!—Konrad Bercovici in Century Magazine.

Shepherd Bagpipers

Shepherds probably were the first players of the bagpipe, its tone is so peculiarly shrill and penetrating and altogether suited to outdoor performance. There are other good reasons for assuming such origin, however. The Persians had such an instrument in very ancient times, it was well known to Roman musicians. Delivers in the history of the latter empire have found that even then the bagpipe was considered a "different" and uncanny implement of sound. It will be information to some that the notes of the bagpipe are purposely out of tune with each other. If perfectly graduated they would not go well with the bass.—Detroit News.

Danish Beauty Spot

An Old world garden is Odense, on the island of Funen, Denmark, where Hans Christian Andersen was born. Its crooked streets are frequented by simple folk and its houses are bright with window boxes and blooming dooryards. The cobbler's whitewashed cottage, with its bright red-tiled roof, breathes of the lore and legend so dear to the hearts of the bumble and hardy horticulturists of this green life. The immortal spirit of the prince of fairy stories mingles with the chatter of happy children in the streets, for the Danish people in the love, life and laughter of their little ones.

Tag Day Among Birds

The biological survey has tagged about 27,000 birds in an effort to get some information about bird migration, a mysterious proceeding which has puzzled mankind since ancient times. Returns on banded birds have amounted to 10,503. Prominent among the bird problems of economic interest which banding may be expected to solve is the control of red-winged blackbirds that do much damage to the rice crop. Poison bait has proved ineffective in the rice fields, so that control measures must be undertaken at other times and other places.

Magnet Draws Bullet

For nearly ten years a Canadian war veteran carried a bullet in his lung. Although located by X-rays, it was in such a position that it could not be reached by forceps. It was removed at last by holding a powerful magnet over the patient's chest and drawing the bullet to a point where it could be seized with forceps through the windpipe. The clever coining of the bullet provided the necessary magnetizable element.

He Passed

A Wall Street broker, dealing 11 clerks, asked the following question on an examination: "Who formed the first company?" A bright youth, a bit puzzled, but not to be fooled, wrote: "Noah successfully floated a company while the rest of the world was in liquidation." His application was accepted.

The Road to Success

Link Preston read this the other day: "The road to success is fragrant with flowers of industry, but the man who gets there has no time to stop by the wayside to pick them."—Chicago.

AROUND THE CITY

No man deserves success who can be spoiled by it.

The woman who wants to indulge in pleasant reflections consults her mirror.

"Oh, I'm just stuck on love letters!" exclaimed the sentimental postman stamp.

Many a man gets the reputation of being a philosopher by preaching what he doesn't practice.

You never can tell. Many a man's clarity consists of giving away what he has no use for himself.

Blessed are the meek. The lowly barnyard fowl is a whole lot better eating than the bird of paradise.

The cynical bachelor observes that when a woman says to her husband, "You may talk as you like," she doesn't really mean it.

Nell—"That girl is always borrowing trouble." Bell—"Yes, she's worrying about her divorce and won't be married till next week."

Youthful energy leads to over-exertion. At the same time the average boy doesn't get half as tired being bad as he does being good.

Blotches—"What I like about Mrs. Talkat is that she has such an open countenance." Slobs—"And what I dislike about her is that she never closes it."

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Allow at least twenty inches from plate to plate when seating guests.

Whipped cream is very good sweetened with a little maple syrup.

Fresh lemon peel rubbed on the fishy forks and knives will remove all odor.

No household machinery will run well without an occasional greasing and oiling.

Let the meringue cool slowly after it has been browned. If chilled too quickly it is apt to become watery.

A few drops of turpentine in the water when washing white silk stockings will keep them from turning yellow.

Keep your eye on the drip pan or drain under the refrigerator, for roaches are very fond of such places.

Tuesday—Forth in Thy name my God I go my daily labors to pursue.

Wednesday—God's work will I do or will I do nothing.

Thursday—Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips.

SENTENCE SERMONS

I have noticed—

That most men work better as a result of appreciation.

That the man who is complaining is usually doing less work.

That no woman enjoys being told how clever some other woman is.

That the woman who is most womanly usually gets more of a woman's rights.

That the number of lodge pins a man wears is no indication of his importance.—Rev. Roy L. Smith in Bethel Courier-Express.

Medical science is becoming so comforting we're told there is no such thing as pain. Now another eminent authority says a cold is not a cold. Soon the poor fellow with rheumatism will be informed that he never felt better in his life.

At last a man has been found who has a word to say for the saxophone. "It is the only instrument," says a music instructor, "that sounds as well while you are learning to play as it does afterward."

IN FLORIDA.

(To My Sister)

What did I see as I walked enthralled under skies of blue today? Old Man Winter disputed and stalled. By summery sails on Tampa Bay;

Scuffed at and flouted by clamoring gulls, Skimming o'er shimmering sea, Keen watch keeping for fishermen's culls, Or grain grown on distant lea.

Winter malign'd by the whispering wind, That's kin to the warm South land, Murmuring tales of the ties that bind,— This pine-song along sandy strand.

Sunlight supreme—sky vistas all cloudless,— What healing is held on its wings! God's own solarium, peerless and priceless, Freeest of all free things.

Palm fronds are swaying, with each breeze playing, Epitome of graceful action! Romance reviving, no sadness nor sighing, Drive this life to distraction.

Bougainvillea to white wall is clinging, Meet hue for the clime's vivid lore, Pure, pearly sands their hands are breaking, On open expanse of shore.

Water sleepily slipping 'round barnacle pier; Pelicans perching solemn and grim; Dark lad idly fishing beside Winter's bier; Norlefish gliding to deeper green and dim.

Happy hearts so mirror nature's mild mood, Merry eye meets smiling sky, Human sunshine! God be praised for all's good!

Safety, silence and simplicity are features of the new Ford six-brake system

ONE of the first things you will notice when you drive the new Ford is the quick, effective, silent action of its six-brake system.

This system gives you the highest degree of safety and reliability because the four-wheel service brakes and the separate emergency or parking brakes are all of the mechanical, internal expanding type, with braking surfaces fully enclosed for protection against mud, water, sand, etc.

The many advantages of this type of braking system have long been recognized. They are brought to you in the new Ford through a series of mechanical improvements embodying much that is new in design and manufacture. A particularly unique feature is the simple way by which a special drum has been constructed to permit the use of two sets of internal brakes on the rear wheels.

A further improvement in braking performance is effected by the self-centering feature of the four-wheel brakes—an exclusive Ford development. Through

Pointed Suggestion

An old farmer, who was attending a church convention, chuckled to himself as he read the subjects on the program. "See here, parson," he said to his pastor, "you've had papers and discussions all day on how to get people to attend church. I've never heard a single address, at a farmers' convention, on how to get cattle to come to the rack. We put all our time on the best kind of feed. I sort of have a notion that if you put more time on discussing what to put in the rack, you wouldn't have to spend all that time discussing how to get your folk to attend church."—Montreal Family Herald.

ALONG LIFE'S
TRAILBy THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Arts, University of Illinois.

RESPONSIBILITY

It was a part of the training of the youthful warrior of the Winnebago tribe of Indians, it is said, that he should take the responsibility for whatever adventures he led his men upon. He was supposed, before he engaged in battle, to have some message or direction from the Great Spirit. If this proved auspicious, and the enemy turned in his favor, then he was the recipient of much honor and praise. If, on the other hand, the fight proved to be a losing one he was held responsible and paid the penalty of death for his misjudgment or misinterpretation of the message of the Great Spirit. Danger was his own concern; he could subject himself to it if he pleased, but at his own peril he led others into danger.

"Nothing has heartened me more," a well-known college executive said to me a short time ago, "and has more increased the respect I have had for the college undergraduate, than an experience I have recently had with some fraternity men."

Briefly his experience was this: Some freshmen just previous to initiation were sent out without the knowledge of the president of the house, to do a very dangerous and foolish as well as illegal act. They were detected and were subject to heavy fines as well as to dismissal from college. The president of the house and the chairman in charge of the initiation came to the college officer and said: "The freshmen concerned should not be penalized. They were only following the directions which they had received from an older man and which they took as a command. Had we known what he had ordered, as we should have known, we would have prevented it; but in any case we are the responsible people; the fault is ours in not supervising matters more carefully. Whatever penalty is inflicted we should bear, and we clearly see that there must be a penalty in order that law be respected and foolish and dangerous pranks be discouraged."

They were quite right; they were, in fact, the ones on which the responsibility really rested. Would that we all might be courageous and manly enough to bear that responsibility when it is ours.

SPARROWS
INSTEAD OF WRENS

(By D. J. Walsh.)

THE young Russells had come to Oakville in the procession of sugar workers to the recent establishment of a factory had brought there. They were very young indeed and fresh from the city. Indeed, it was the first time in her life that Peach Russell had ever set foot in a small country town. She found a keen difference from what she had been used to.

"But I like it, Billy; I really do," she told her husband. "It's so quiet and orderly. I'm sure we can save lots of money here. And do you know what I'm thinking?"

"No, what?" returned Billy. He was continually being astonished by the wisdom of Peach's little blond pate. She was only a confectionery salesgirl when he married her, as delectable and unsubstantial seemingly as a pink french cream, but she was making a wonderful wife. Billy was a very good sort of young fellow himself, steady and grave and honest, but he would have told you frankly that he "wasn't a marker to Peach." And so he thought now.

"I've been thinking that I wish we had a real home," said Peach. "You know, Billy, a little house where I could learn to cook and do things like that. It's nice here at Mrs. Killen's, but it costs so much. I'm sure we could live cheaper in our own home. And if we're ever going to have a home we want to establish it while we're young."

"You're right, Peachie," agreed Billy. "We'll look up a house."

One March Saturday when they had half a day's leisure they went forth to look for a house. They had gathered a few facts to guide them, but they were as ignorant as ever were a pair of young birds attempting to build their first nest.

Not that Saturday did they find what they wanted, and perhaps they never would have found it at all if it had not been for Mr. King, the kindly real estate man. As it was, the instant they saw the house they knew they must have it.

It was gray and small and compact like a bumble bee's nest, only neither Billy nor Peach had ever seen a bumble bee's nest, so they could not draw that comparison. Within it had just the kind of rooms that a pair of young married people would delight in—a darling tiny kitchen and dining room, a sizable living room, a wee den to snuggle down in cold winter evenings. Upstairs there were two closets, all freshly papered and white painted. There was land enough about the little house for flowers and vegetables and a lawn.

"I can just see you with your coat off pushing a lawnmower while I sit here on the porch drinking your socks!" whispered Peach. "Oh, Billy, let's have it!"

"It will take lots of saving and economy, Peachie," said Billy. "But it will be fun to save and economize! I'll be the best little saver and economizer you ever saw, Billy. Honest, I will."

What could Billy say to that except that she should have the house? Mrs. Duke smiled wryly.

I forgot to say that Mrs. Duke was the woman who owned the house and lived in it. She was very old, in Peach's eyes, and she had never been anything that was worth looking at. She sniffed and chuckled and sighed—she was just that kind of woman. She made Peach feel that she was making a sacrifice when she gave up her dear little house.

"I've lived here twenty-six years," she sighed, "and Mr. Duke has been gone from me sixteen. That's a long time to be a widow, my dear. I wouldn't sell out only my sister wants me to come and live with her. I hope you'll be good to my dear little house. I always wash the paint spring and fall with gasoline and water. Be careful about always taking hold of the doorknobs. And if you have rubber heels put on your shoes your floors will stay nice longer. And you must always lower the window in the kitchen when you blow meat. And then—well, there's my birdies, my dear little wrens. They come every spring and nest under the veranda. How they'll miss me! I hope you'll be good to them, my dear. My poor little wrens! If you'll just throw them a few crumbs now and then. It's a hard world for little birdies. I hope you'll feed my wrens."

Peach nearly went as she heard this. She promised everything, especially to feed the wrens. She did not know what wrens were. Almost the only bird names she knew were the swan and the ostrich, and she had seen them in the city parks. She made up her mind there and then that she would protect and care for Mrs. Duke's little birdies, even as Mrs. Duke herself would have done.

Within a week Mrs. Duke was gone and the Russells were in the little gray house. They had nothing, being so newly married, to make a home out of aside from love and energy and high enthusiasm. But there was a really well stocked furniture store and a second hand shop, both open to their patronage. Perhaps Peach bought most at the second hand shop. They found such bargains there and they cost so little. And Billy discovered that he was something of a genius with hammer and saw.

Such a good time as they had with their home-making! Such advantages, such trials which, however, always turned out to be joyful occasions. And Peach's new cook book! What a mystery it was at first! But she had the sense not to attempt the impossible at first. And the first time she placed a simple little meal of baked macaroni and cheese before Billy he did not know that she had practiced upon it for days unbeknown to him!

One morning Peach was awakened by a great twittering about her open bedroom window. She opened her eyes. It was scarcely light but she could see a little bird sitting on the window-sill looking in at her. This was one of Mrs. Duke's wrens! The friendly little creature! She meant to cultivate him. Next night when she went upstairs to bed she found the same little bird—or so she thought—sitting on the cord that held the electric light bulb before her little dressing table. Frightened, the bird flew down from the cord and went under the bed. It took both her and Billy an hour's work to get him successfully out of the window.

Billy began to complain that the chirping of the birds kept him awake mornings when he should be sleeping. They aroused him as soon as it was dawn.

"They make such an infernal racket, Peachie. I'd rather hear the old elevated."

"They're not so musical as I thought wrens were," admitted Peach.

When one day she found a funny, messy nest built on the window-sill of her bedroom she felt surprised. It pained her that Billy should tear the nest ruthlessly away. But the birds came right back. Billy tore that nest away seven times before he convinced the birds they were not wanted.

But the birds did build in the bitter-sweet vine at the end of the porch and within the porch itself. They were increasingly noisy and nasty. And in no time at all the nests were full of young birds!

One day Mrs. Ross came to sit on the porch with Peach. Mrs. Ross was elderly and agreeable and she had taken more than a neighborly interest in Peach.

"Why don't you rout out those dreadful sparrows?" she asked. "They will simply drive you out of the house if you don't."

"Sparrows!" gasped Peach. She listened, amazed, while Mrs. Ross gave her a learned dissertation on the subject. "Sparrows!" she repeated. "I thought they were wrens!"

"Come over to my house and I'll show you a wren," replied Mrs. Ross laughing.

But it was not until, fascinated and charmed, Peach listened to the spontaneous outburst of the tiny golden-throated prima donna in Mrs. Ross's birdhouse that she realized how she had been deceived. When she told Mrs. Ross about Mrs. Duke's injunction to "feed my wrens" the woman laughed merrily.

"Myra Duke," she said, "played a good joke on you. Probably she is laughing in her sleeve over it at this minute. Oh, yes, she knew the difference. And I'll tell you how I know. She didn't like me and she knew I loved my wrens. So she cultivated these pesky sparrows thinking they would drive away the other birds. Get rid of the sparrows and the wrens will come, mark my words."

The young Russells acted on her advice. They got rid of the sparrows. Then the real wrens came.

Odd Mineral That Is

Mined Only in Utah

Gilsonite is one of the oddest minerals in the world. According to the bureau of mines, it is mined only in Utah and is a brilliant, black, asphaltic substance used in the manufacture of varnish, paint, electrical insulation, ink, telephone mouthpieces, electric switch handles and knobs and buttons of various kinds.

This queer mineral was discovered in Ashley valley several years after the first white man settled in the valley in 1878. At first it was thought to be a variety of coal. When it burned, however, it gave off large quantities of dense black smoke with a peculiar odor and instead of reducing to ashes melted and became a tar-like substance.

"Various theories have been advanced as to the formation of the veins of gilsonite in Utah," says the bureau of mines. "The most plausible theory appears to be that the formation of this great asphaltic basin resulted in gigantic cracks in the brittle and nonelastic sandstone measures of the Utah formation with enough heat to distill the oily matter in these carbonaceous measures from the so-called 'living Green River shales.'"

Gardens at Night

The delights of the garden have been heretofore limited to the hours of daylight, when the beautiful colors and arrangements of the plants could be observed, but this delight is now to be enjoyed at night as well, by the use of flood lighting. The lights are hidden and are located to make spots of light and shade throughout the landscape work with fascinating effect. The modern art of illumination engineering has gone among the rose bushes and thickets with its flaming brush and daubed and tinted with a delicacy of line and color that is winning for this tourmaline reputation of being "the painted garden."

Avoid Meddling

Meddling never pays any dividends except trouble. It brings no friends, creates no jobs, results in no gain. There is a Spanish proverb which aptly describes it: "He that meddles not his own business shall never mind mine."—Critt.

HIS LAST QUESTION

The tourist guide was getting tired. He had to answer too many dumb questions.

"And just where did you say this boulder came from?" inquired one numbskull.

The guide politely replied that a glacier brought it down.

Then up spoke the inquisitive one again: "And where did the glacier go?"

"Aw," said the guide, "it went back after another boulder."

Aha! a Clew!

The great detective glanced around the room with a practiced eye. The pictures were torn into shreds, the chairs were broken, the table lying on the top of the piano. A great splash of blood was on the carpet.

"Someone has been here," he said.

"What is the worst thing about her?"

"That insignificant little Percy Snapp who is always at her side."

Individual Efficiency
"Efficiency" reward must win. As life goes on, through thick and thin, For any man with courage, blood, Who goes ahead and does his best.

Trying to Beat the Game
She (at bench)—It's awful to meet one of the boys you were engaged to last summer.

Her Friend—It must be. She—I just ran across Dick and he wanted the old engagement renewed without giving up a new ring.

Challenge
"Why is that girl so popular?" asked Kitchener.

"She has given it out," answered Humdred, "that she can't be kissed."

"I get the situation. Hardy adventurers are arriving in swarms."

Beyond the Law
Cop on Shore—I'm going to arrest you when you come out of there.

Man to Water—Ha-ha! That's a joke on you. I'm not coming out. I'm committing suicide.—The Faru Jour nal.

Wife—George, there's a burglar in the pantry eating my pies. I do believe.

Hubby—Do you think so? Then it won't be necessary for me to give him a dose of lead.

Happy Hatriot
A statesman has to take a chance. In speaking for a cause. The kid who does a song and dance is sure of his applause.

Easily Identified
The New Stencil—I forgot to initial these letters. Shall I do it now?

The Correspondent—Don't bother about it. I'll have them re your work by your fingerprints which show quite plainly.

Fashion Notes
Mrs. Insley—The indications are that the narrow skirt will continue to be worn a great deal this season. Her Husband—I'll bet they can't be as tight worn as the worn old skirt gowns.

To Finish the Job
Pomace—Pretty good, don't you think? I made it for a cover design.

Grills—Now if you could only do sign a cover for the picture.

High Spirits
The Reddick—How much for fire water?

McGraw—Griddle—Well, rum has gone up so I'll have to charge you ten acres a drink for it.

Pitiable
Jones—What'd that cheap sales man sell you this morning?

Smith—A book on how to cultivate sales resistance.

Somebody's Wrong
"I don't think this orchestra is worth good, do you?"

"Well, it has had some difficulty in keeping time with you."

I Will Teach You To PLAY the Tenor Banjo or Mandolin

To you who have so often remarked, "If I could only play some musical instrument," I now say, "There's no reason why, you shouldn't."

Even if you can't read a note of music right now, you will soon be able to after a few lessons, and before you realize it you will be playing well enough to amaze your friends and relatives.

Just call me on the phone and I will explain how easy it is to learn to play, also of my plan to organize a Banjo-Mandolin Club here in Bethel.
